As a property owner, you'll know that managing a rental requires a lot of time and expertise. While many landlords usually try to manage their own properties from a distance at first, ultimately most tend to choose hiring a property manager to save themselves from the constant hassle and to have someone on site to properly manage, market and physically meet prospective tenants.

A Property manager take care of the rental property basics – minor repairs, vetting prospective tenants, collecting rents – so you can focus on my career, family, and locating the next profitable rental property investment.

In that sense, by hiring a property manager, landlords gets the benefits of being a landlord without all the hard work. One of the most important roles that a property manager plays is that they act as a buffer between the tenant and the landlord. The landlord doesn't receive random calls, texts, or emails from tenants at all hours of the day or night. That is why, hiring an experienced property manager is perfect for landlords who resides far away from their property.

The key to making sure this strategy works is ensuring you only invest in properties with enough cash flow to pay for a property manager and still score a sizeable rate of return.
